Apprenticeship VS College?

So you've just left school. Taking the next steps towards a career can be daunting. The main issue is what to do next. Current options include going to college, joining an apprenticeship scheme or finding a job.

This can be a stressful time, because you've got to try and make your mind up about what you actually want to do in life. It's important to evaluate your position, your strengths and what makes you tick before making a decision. You don't want to get six months down the line and discover you don't enjoy the vocational path you have undertaken with an apprenticeship or that education is no longer for you.

If you take on a job with no educational commitments it is easier to jump ship than if you have committed to an apprenticeship or continued in education. Here are some pros and cons of choosing an apprenticeship rather than college to hopefully help you make the right decision.

PROS

Learning On The Job –
From the start, you learn as you work. You're not confined in a classroom and you get hands-on experience and a real life environment to learn problem solving skills. A real benefit in the future is that it gives you an advantage over those who haven't gained as much practical vocational experience.

(Continues on next page)

CONS

Hard work – You're going to have to work hard to get your qualification and practical work completed. You might sometimes have to miss social events because you'll have to do a full day's work every day and study as well.

(Turn over)

PROS

You Get Paid To Learn – As an apprentice you earn a wage, paid directly into your bank account. You also get holiday pay. College students will have to study and work part-time to earn any money.

CONS

Low pay – As said previously, you are paid to learn. However, apprenticeship wages tend to be the minimum wage. You will only get a pay rise when the government changes the minimum wage. After all, your employer is helping you develop your skills.

(Turn over)

PROS

Getting Ahead – You'll have more experience in practical work than your friends who have gone to college. You will also learn typical workplace skills such as teamwork. You can learn even more by taking on paid overtime.

(Continues on next page)

CONS

You'll start at the bottom – You need to learn the basics. You might find that some of your tasks you start with are boring, but that's just a fact of life. Everyone has to do jobs that can be a bit mind-numbing at times, but once you've worked through those tasks you can move on to better things!

(Turn over)

PROS

A Job Opportunity – If you've shown that you can cut the mustard, there may be an opportunity at the end of the apprenticeship for a permanent position and an opportunity to join a pension scheme.

CONS

Stand out from the crowd – Competition is tough. Apprenticeships are in high demand, more so than college places. If you really want to get an apprenticeship then do your homework, know what is expected of you and do some background research.

(Turn over)

As you can see, there are some real positive aspects to an apprenticeship, but there are also some negative factors that you should consider before taking the plunge.

Good luck!

Fast-forward two years and compare yourself against a friend who decided to go to college to gain qualifications as opposed to doing an apprenticeship. Where would you both be now?

Now look at the job market where you are both applying for the same position. When the employer looks at your CV's they will see you both have the same level of qualification. However, you have two years' worth of work experience, a qualification achieved exclusively in the work place and a reference from an employer. It would be highly unusual not to be able to include more detail on your CV as well. Put yourself in the

Jack's story

I left school at 16 after my GCSE's and was mystified as to what I was going to do. I explored both vocational and academic options at college where all my friends were going. But being a confident and hard working individual, I decided these characteristics could be put to better use in an apprenticeship, even though I was apprehensive and knew I would miss out on some of the great social events at college.

Despite a tough selection process because of fierce competition, I started my level 2 Business Administration Apprenticeship with Chesterborough Council, working in one of their business innovation centres. On my first day, walking into the building was intimidating. After all, I was no longer with all my mates at school and I felt like a fish out of water. But I was soon accepted and made to feel like a team member.

Over time, the role provided me with great exposure to all aspects of the business, although a lot of my first tasks were repetitive and boring. However, even these helped me really improve my time management skills, and when I had finished my apprenticeship I was able to secure a full time position. That wouldn't have happened if I had gone to college.

(Continues on next page)

My apprenticeship was arranged through a training provider, Skills for Careers, and throughout my apprenticeship I was released one day a month from the Council to attend workshops run by Skills for Careers at their Business Academy. I was able to meet and network with a group of apprentices from a variety of businesses. A whole host of topics were covered, including presentation skills.

I had a dedicated assessor who worked really closely with me and was always available if I had any queries or concerns.

I made the right decision, unlike my friends who are just leaving college, who don't have a full time job, aren't earning any money and are not yet on a career ladder. I love the fact that I am earning money, even though the government hasn't given me a pay rise!
